Fund commentary as at end Quarter 4 2021

Short-term outlook: Both the US and the euro area have reached their pre-pandemic level GDP, while the UK is still 1.5% below its pre-pandemic level. Recent economic data point to slower but steady growth, having decelerated from the re-opening peaks. However, there is uncertainty over the underlying cause of the slowdown and how much growth will slow. This is due to the presence of supply chain disruptions, energy price rises, Chinese property developer troubles and lingering worries over new Covid variants. Each of these presents potential to slow growth but are unlikely to cause a full collapse. Balancing this uncertain outlook for growth with higher inflation, several central banks have floated the idea of raising interest rates. In December, the Bank of England became the first major central bank to raise its base rate.

Inflation: Developed market inflation rates stayed elevated in the November round of readings. The breakdown of drivers shows a significant contribution from soaring energy prices but core measures of inflation are also above target in the UK, US and euro area. Some of the core components of inflation such as housing have started to contribute meaningfully to the headline inflation figure. We continue to expect that structural factors will keep inflation anchored in the medium-term but current elevated levels raise the upside risk that second round effects will keep inflation at sustainably elevated levels.

Monetary Policy: After surprising the market by leaving policy rates unchanged in November's MPC meeting, the Bank of England finally began its tightening cycle after raising rate by 15bps to 0.25% in December. The Bank has however acknowledged the downside risk from Omicron and have revised down their expectations for the level of UK GDP in Q4 2021 from 1.0% to 0.6% since the November Report. Minutes from December FOMC indicates that the Federal Reserve will initiate Quantitative Tapering (i.e., normalising the balance sheet) shortly after the first rate hike, with the pace of normalisation likely faster than the last cycle. Fed officials foresee up to 75 basis points rate increase in 2022, with the median projection of first hike in June 2022. The ECB continues to guide that policy rates will remain at current or lower levels until it sees inflation reaching its inflation target durably, such that it stabilises at 2% in the medium term. Compared with the September 2021 projections, the outlook for 2022 HICP inflation has been revised upwards by 1.5 percentage points to 3.2%, before expecting it to stabilise at 1.8% in 2023.
